

Travel Planning at the Library

The library has many resources for planning your next vacation, business trip, or other getaway. Depending on your destination, you may find answers to your traveling questions between the call numbers 910 and 920. A catalog search can narrow down your choices. Of course, the Internet contains a wealth of valuable, current information to satisfy your traveling needs as well.

Here is a website guide to get you started in the right direction!

Index of the Web—Travel Index page

<http://www.indexoftheweb.com/Travel.htm>

Indexoftheweb.com provides an extensive list of links to travel resources. Becoming familiar with the links described here will save you hours of searching on your own.

Travelocity

<http://www.travelocity.com>

Travelocity is mentioned among the links on index of the web, but it is worth singling out. You can choose travel packages here and also set up “fare watchers” that alert you when prices drop for your trip of choice.

Southwest Airlines

<http://www.southwest.com>

Southwest Airlines does not post their fares on websites like travelocity so that they can provide the lowest fares possible to their customers. It is usually worth the visit to their website to check specials. They also provide affordable one-way tickets.

Nashville International Airport

<http://www.flynashville.com/>

If you are flying out of Nashville, you may want to check local conditions on this site. The airport also provides a visitor travel guide, terminal, and flight information.

US Department of State Travel Page

<http://travel.state.gov/>

Start here for information about traveling abroad, which gives security alerts and safety tips, along with requirements for passports and even international adoptions.

Maps Online

<http://www.mapquest.com> (MapQuest)

<http://maps.google.com> (Google Maps)

Both MapQuest and Google provide online map support, helping you find your driving destination with ease.
